ABSTRACT

This collection of 31 presentation slides provides suggestions for students applying for health and physical education scholarships, offering guidelines and specific resource information. It focuses on myths (e.g., scholarships only go to the best students, obtaining a loan decreases the chances of receiving a scholarship, and paying for a scholarship search service is a good investment); facts (e.g., over 1/3 of available funds are unclaimed annually, $28 billion worth of scholarships are available from the private sector annually, and awards are often highly competitive based on achievement); guidelines for scholarship applicants (e.g., be willing to spend time to locate and apply for awards; use free Web site searches; do not delay in ordering copies of official transcripts and test scores; submit completed applications early; and pay attention to spelling and grammar); selected scholarships in health, physical education, recreation and dance; and scholarship resources. Program Purpose

The purpose of this program is to provide guidelines and specific resource information for college students seeking scholarships in health and physical education.

Outline of Content

1. Myths and Facts
2. Guidelines for scholarship applicants
3. Selected scholarships in HPERD
4. Scholarship resources

Scholarship Myths

There are many myths that are believed to be true when applying for a scholarship. One may believe that there is too much competition or that scholarships only go to the best students. There is also a misperception that paying for a scholarship search service is a good investment or that obtaining a loan decreases the chance for scholarships.

Scholarship "factoids"

Many "factoids are also associated with applying for scholarships. Some of them include: There are twenty-eight billion dollars worth of scholarships available from private sectors annually, awards are often highly competitive based on achievement, there are over one third of available funds unclaimed annually, and there is an expectation to receive only one tenth of scholarships for which are applied for.

Guidelines for Scholarship Applicants

There are many guidelines for those who wish to apply for a scholarship. One must be willing to spend time to locate and apply for awards as well as contacting local groups and organizations and using free Web site searches. It is important to practice good record-keeping skills and to follow instructions closely. If you have questions, then you should call or email but ask for copies of essays from prior recipients to get a good understanding of the application. Also, it is important to prepare a narrative of your need for the scholarship, leadership abilities, paid and volunteer work experience, as well as school involvement. Most of the time, scholarship reviewers consider qualities about who you are, what your ambitions and motivations are, and your originality. Reviewers also want to know whether you can and how you follow instructions, whether you're neat, organized, and concise. When you are filling out the actual application, pay attention to spelling and grammar, ask others to review your application, and be sure to provide all required copies. Never delay ordering copies of official transcripts, ACT and other test scores. Be sure to submit your completed application early. For your letters of recommendations, select educators, community leaders, and others. Provide them each with copies of the scholarship application, award criteria, your resume, and a narrative. Always give them a realistic deadline.

CLEARINGHOUSE ON TEACHING AND TEACHER EDUCATION

ERIC

June 17, 2003

Dear Presenter:

The ERIC Clearinghouse on Teaching and Teacher Education invites you to contribute to the ERIC database by providing us with a copy of your paper presented at AAHPERD's 2003 National Convention & Exposition (April 1-5, 2003, Philadelphia, PA). Abstracts of documents that are accepted by ERIC are available through computers in both on-line and CD/ROM versions. The ERIC database is accessed worldwide and is used by teachers, administrators, researchers, students, policymakers, and others with an interest in education.
